DETAILED ANALYSIS

Employer complaint system

Under the Unemployment Compensation Law,¹ an individual must satisfy both monetary and nonmonetary requirements to receive unemployment benefits. The monetary requirements relate to whether an individual worked in employment covered by the law long enough and earned enough during a specified period of time. The nonmonetary requirements concern filing appropriate paperwork, the reason why the individual is unemployed, and work search requirements.²

The bill requires the Director of Job and Family Services, the official who administers the Unemployment Compensation Law, to establish and maintain a process for an employer to report that an applicant for or a recipient of benefits has failed or is failing to meet any of the nonmonetary eligibility requirements. The process must allow the employer to make a complaint through a conspicuous internet link located on the Department of Job and Family
