Brandon T. Minster, Economist

The bill requires the Ohio Department of Developmental Disabilities (DODD) to create a model written supported decision-making plan that can be used by an adult with developmental disabilities (the principal) and one or more of the principal's supporters. Minimal cost to DODD is expected from the creation of this model written plan.

The bill requires DODD to create informational materials about formal and informal supported decision-making plans intended for use by (1) adults with developmental disabilities, (2) their family members, (3) professionals likely to encounter supported decision-making plans, including social, medical, and financial service professionals, and (4) the general public. There will be administrative costs associated with preparing this material.
