DETAILED ANALYSIS

Student meals

The bill requires school districts, community schools, STEM schools, and college-preparatory boarding schools to provide each student a meal who requests one, regardless of whether the student can pay or owes a meal debt.¹ The bill also prohibits a district or school from:

1. Requiring a student to discard a meal because of the student's inability to pay or because the student owes a meal debt;
2. Requiring a student who cannot pay for a meal or owes a meal debt to do chores or other work to pay for meals; however, a student may be required to do chores or work if all students are required to do so regardless of meal debt;
3. Refusing a meal to a student as a form of disciplinary action; and

4. Publicly identifying or stigmatizing a student who cannot pay for a meal or owes a meal debt.²

Communications about meal debts

The bill requires each district or school to communicate directly with a parent or guardian, and not a student, about the student's meal debt. However, the bill expressly permits the district or school to answer a student's inquiry about the student's meal debt. The bill also clarifies that a school may send a student home with a letter addressed to a parent or guardian regarding an outstanding debt.³

Guidance for collecting meal debt

The bill requires the Department of Education and Workforce to provide districts and schools with guidance regarding collecting student meal debt. The guidance must include best practices and information for creating an online system for the payment of school debt. The Department must post the guidance on its publicly accessible website.⁴
